The only solution for protection of pen drives with USB 1.0/2.0.Giants, coaches and media react to infamous Play 33 San Francisco Giants' Matt Duffy (18) celebrates his third inning three-run home run with teammates Hunter Pence (25) and Brandon Belt (17) on Wednesday during their MLB game against the Los Angeles Angels in Anaheim, Calif. (Stephen Dunn/Getty Images) Hustling to the plate in the bottom of the ninth inning, the Giants decided their best shot at keeping their season alive was going to be to use a non-conventional strategy. And that's when Miguel Montero stepped up to the plate. Montero's season has been a tale of two halves. He came to the Giants out of spring training as the starting catcher, but he hit.167 with one homer and five RBIs. Montero started the season in the minors, but he played so well that by the end of July, he was called up to the majors. By then, the Giants had already fallen out of the race and Montero had just one hit in 13 at-bats. In other words, he had nothing to lose and the Giants had nothing to lose by bringing him up at the end of the season. "I don't understand why anybody doesn't get it," Giants manager Bruce Bochy said. "You're looking at a guy that's coming back from a year off from the rigors of major league ball, and he's put in the time at the minor-league level and he's done a great job there. And now he gets a chance, and he's given a chance in a big-league game. "He's been excellent at this point." Bochy got his explanation from Dinger front-office boss Brian Sabean, and Sabean was quick to assert that Montero is and will always be the starting catcher in San Francisco. Before Montero stepped to the plate Wednesday, San Francisco had a base runner on second with nobody out in the bottom of the ninth inning. The Angels had the lead runner on first base with two outs. With two outs in the bottom of the ninth, Bochy has no choice but to go with the unconventional plan of using Montero as a pinch- 09e8f5149f
