There are many factors that may be considered, like time of the year, location within the voyage, weight, dimensions, cargo and other information. This is because ships can be greatly damaged through the wrong relocation process. So, by doing some research on how to relocate ships you are able to determine how to operate in a much safer way. Earthquakes can damage the stability of ships and even send the vessels on a destructive path. That is why ships are required to constantly monitor their surroundings on the surface of the water. To mitigate this risk, the vessels visit subduction zones, such as dead whales. Traveling ships must be very careful to avoid conflicts with ships moving in the opposite direction. That is why several lookout positions are placed aboard ships. The lookout positions are positioned so that they do not interfere with each other, then the captain can give the entire crew a new berth.
