Q: How is a variable calculated in a single instance of a SignalR connection? I am trying to learn how to make SignalR work within my application. I am trying to implement a chat application. There is a server (which i can live) and a client. The server sends a'message' message to the client. Everything works as far as I know, but I don't understand how it works. To be clear, I know that it's at a global level. I also know that the client will use the same connection to different pages and rooms. My question is regarding how a variable'message' is created. As far as I am aware, there is only 1 variable/instance of a connection created. Here is my code: public class ChatAppHub : Hub { public async Task Send(string message) { await Clients.All.SendAsync("send", message); } public void received(IEnumerable messages) { Clients.All.asyncReceiveMessage(async ( 570a42141b
