A San Francisco-based company named Boatcoin has raised $6.5 million in funding to create "tickets" for "selling boat rides on the blockchain." A BoatCoin founders have used the company's new funding to buy a $10 million yacht. The BoatCoin will create a blockchain-based system for charging passengers for boat rides on the San Francisco Bay and, according to the company, allow the purchaser to "keep track of the transaction on the distributed ledger." A BoatCoin employee told Business Insider: "Businesses traditionally only have a paper trail for transactions; we want to offer people a safe and secure ticketing experience that can be redeemed on any trip, whether it's a 10 mile charter to Sausalito or a 200 mile trip to Vancouver." Founded in December, 2017, BoatCoin is co-founded by Ian Turpin, who is also the CEO of Homejoy, a company in which he left to co-found BoatCoin. Turpin previously founded XO Communications, which helped found Dijon Investment Partners and received more than $800 million in venture funding. He later founded Homejoy, a company that runs an app that lets homeowners and renters "clean, de-clutter, and organize" rooms in their homes and apartments. The company, which is based in San Francisco, raised $8.2 million in its first round of funding in November, 2017. The company describes itself as "the world's first blockchain-based ticketing platform for the hospitality and travel industry." It has also raised $2.5 million from the venture-capital fund Accel and has the support of Sir Richard Branson of Virgin Airlines, who is its co-chairman. Darin O'Sullivan, who also co-founded BoatCoin, told Business Insider that the boat costs $120,000, but it is a very powerful yacht with a swimming pool. "This is a really cool place to live for a long period of time," O'Sullivan said of the yacht. "We bought it for ourselves. If you need something for a team meeting, or you're entertaining people who are coming in at a certain time, it's great for that." "We picked a big yacht," added O'Sullivan. �

While the barn doors are still firmly locked, the farm gate is now being installed as key and lock (or better) to avoid the use of uniform. In the old days, farms were closed by putting a chain across the front gate and closing the gate with a bolt. Later a lock was added to the gate but farmers were just as likely to leave the gate shut with a bright light to protect livestock from predators. There was always the slightest possibility that the dogs would go in and eat something. On the other hand, the gate kept the farmers and their families out. If someone was out at night, an intruder was detected and the farmer had to track it down. Of course, we all know that the dogs can be trained to guard the gate, especially if they have a large place to move around in. That worked okay if we knew the people who owned the farm, because there would always be someone to go in and leave the animals out. In this day of open communications via phones, computers, and email, it is getting even harder to know who is out there. That can be very dangerous for livestock. The new COVID-19 protocols are to keep farms locked, but we still have to find ways to protect livestock. While research is on-going to find a safe method for the carriers, the smartest move is to install a gate that can be locked, but still be completely open. This is the more recently proven method of protecting livestock from the carrier virus. While there is no magic bullet solution to finding the carrier, there is one very small and simple change that may help. The previous idea was to keep the dogs inside. Recently research has demonstrated that no matter how much the dogs like to go inside, it is nearly impossible for them to get inside. This is where the answers has become a bit more complicated. We have seen that if we have a reinforced gate, the dogs will not be able to open it. On the other hand, if we have a gate that is not reinforced, they can get through that gate. The solution? Reinforce the gate and leave a hole for
