Exploring Photoshop's File Management System If you're like most people, you probably created your first digital image on a cheap, knockoff-priced digital camera or a scanner. You took a snapshot of the family vacation, a sunrise, or a picture of your latest lunch date. Even today, most people use cheap, knockoff-priced cameras to take their photos. Creating your first image was exciting, and you were eager to share your new digital creation with the world. You probably saved the image in some bitmapped format (such as a JPEG file) and sent it off to the one and only image-hosting site available at the time, your favorite online photo-hosting site, namely, Yahoo! Even though Yahoo! has since been acquired by another company, it remains a formidable online photo host and image-sharing service. You watched with excitement for the results you would see on the site. But your excitement waned after viewing the results. The photos looked dull and the colors duller. The photos felt flat and did not look like the beautiful photos you had imagined. This was because you didn't have the expert knowledge of Photoshop that could transform and enhance your images and make them stand out from the crowd. Think about it this way: Even though your camera has a digital zoom, such as a 4 × optical zoom, you don't use it all the Adhesion molecules and the thymus. The mammalian immune system includes two independent lymphoid lineages, namely, the T and B lymphocytes. The functional differentiation of the cells of these two lineages depends upon the presence of foreign antigen in the form of a multimeric glycoprotein antigen complex. The vast majority of these antigens are produced by cells of a foreign species and as such do not represent self-molecules. The recognition of antigen appears to require the presence of a cell surface glycoprotein complex known as an adhesion molecule. T and B lymphocytes express different types of adhesion molecules. Antigen-presenting cells, B lymphocytes, T lymphocytes, and the hematopoietic stem cells all require, on the other hand, the expression of adhesion molecules to interact with one another. The relative importance of these various molecules in the immune response is just beginning to be understood. This chapter describes the biological role of the adhesion molecules involved in antigen presentation and the lymphocyte homing process, and delineates the sequence of expression of these molecules during T and B cell differentiation.

PPAR $\gamma$  agonist enhances early differentiation and function of human adipose-derived stem cells through BMP-2 induction. Human adipose-derived stem cells (hADSCs) are multipotent cells with the ability to differentiate into various lineages. The aim of this study was to investigate the effect of a peroxisome proliferator-activated receptor  $\gamma$  (PPAR $\gamma$ ) agonist, LY 117018, on hADSC differentiation and function. After induction with adipogenic medium containing LY 117018, the hADSCs differentiated into adipocytes and expressed PPAR $\gamma$ , vascular endothelial growth factor (VEGF), adiponectin, fatty acid binding protein-4 (FABP4) and Lipoprotein lipase (LPL) mRNA significantly, whereas osteoblastic markers, osteocalcin and alkaline phosphatase (ALP) were down-regulated. Moreover, after stimulation with LY 117018, the PPAR $\gamma$  agonist induced BMP-2 expression and secretion and BMP-2 expression was also increased, which strongly induced VEGF and adiponectin. Furthermore, in vitro human vascular endothelial cells (HUVECs) were co-cultured with hADSCs and LY 117018 induced the tube formation and growth. These results indicate that PPAR $\gamma$  agonist enhanced the differentiation of hADSCs into adipocytes and the secretion of adiponectin, VEGF and LPL, which was, at least partially, associated with BMP-2 induction and angiogenesis. Therefore, LY 117018 is expected to be a valuable strategy for improving adipocyte differentiation and vascularization in the absence of fat grafting.
